Timeline

Marriage

Engagement

Charles proposed to Diana on 6 February 1981 at Windsor Castle. Diana and Charles had met only 13 times before they became engaged.

Wedding

The marriage of Charles and Diana, took place on 29 July 1981, marking a highpoint in the popularity of the Royal Family. It was seen by a global television audience of 750 million in 74 countries.

Seperation

Tensions arose as the press and public lavished attention on Diana over-and-above Charles. Charles and Diana lived largely separate lives from around 1986, and Charles's affair with Camilla continued.

Divorce

In November 1995, Princess Diana gave her famous Panorama interview with Martin Bashir in which she told viewers "there were three of us in this marriage – so it was a bit crowded".

The wedding of Charles and Diana married at St Paul's Cathedral on 29 July 1981 in what has been described as the wedding of the century.

Charity

“Anywhere I see suffering,
that is where I want to be,
doing what I can.”

HIV/AIDS

Diana was the first member of the British royal family to support physical contact with people living with AIDS. In 1989, she opened the landmark AIDS Centre in London. In 1991, she hugged an AIDS patient.

Landmines

Diana was patron of the HALO Trust, an organisation that removes debris—particularly landmines—left behind by war. Diana's work on the landmines issue has been described as influential in the signing of the Ottawa Treaty, which created an international ban on the use of anti-personnel landmines.

Cancer, leprosy, homeless people...

In 1988, Diana opened Children with Leukaemia (later renamed Children with Cancer UK). She supports organizations that fight poverty and homelessness, as well as charities and organizations focused on social and psychological issues.

Fashion

“They don't want me in off-duty mode, they want a princess.
Let's give them what they want.”

Pre-fame, she stuck to “Sloane Ranger” staples like preppy sweater vests, printed midi-dresses, and equestrian boots. Once she became a princess, Diana switched gears and began to rely on trusted designers like Catherine Walker, Anya Hindmarch, and Murray Arbeid to create exquisite custom pieces.

Fashion

“Following the separation from the Prince of Wales, she said she didn't want to be known a clothes horse but as a workhorse.”

It's telling that Diana's style truly bloomed once she was freed from royal restrictions. After her separation from Prince Charles in 1992, she found herself with a wealth of new options. She wasn't the same Shy Di who hid behind baggy sweaters. Confident and entirely in control of her destiny, this era was her best.

Weakness

“Diana was nothing more than a pretty ornamental vase, merely a naïve fashion model.”

Individual

Low self-worth

Emotional dependency

Diana grew up in a divorced family, but her family's wealth and power allowed her to do whatever she wanted (dropping out of school, living alone, etc.). She had a strong desire to be loved, so she tried to seek self-identity from Prince Charles, self-harm, public attention, and other aspects.

Family

Institutional isolation

Difficulty adapting

The royal family emphasizes restraint, distance, and ritual, while Diana prefers intimacy, sincerity, and emotional expression. When she became the focus of public opinion, the royal system rarely provided emotional or institutional support, instead requiring her to "maintain a superficial respectability."

Society

Excessive
symbolization

She excels at using the media to advocate for vulnerable groups, but also needs social recognition and attention to realize her self-worth. Her "friendly yet vulnerable" image has attracted global media attention, but at the same time, it has made her private life almost impossible to keep private.
